

GAMBLING IN NOTT STREET.

WHAT SOME CHINAMEN KNOW ABOUT IT.

CAPTAIN M'CALLAGH ON TRIAL FOR PERMITTING IT.

—HIS DEFENSE.

Chinamen with pistols and Chinamen dressed in American fashion went into the trial-room at Police Headquarters yesterday to tell the Commissioner of the Police what they knew about the gambling in Nott street. Some of them talked with a pretty good command of English, and some with a very poor one. The Commissioner, who was sitting at the head of the bench, and who was surrounded by a large number of police officers, listened to the testimony of the Chinamen with a very attentive ear. The first witness was a Chinaman named Lee, who was a resident of Nott street. He testified that he had been in Nott street for many years, and that he had seen many Chinamen gambling there. He said that the gambling was done in a room on the second floor of a building on Nott street, and that the room was kept by a Chinaman named Lee. He said that the gambling was done in a room on the second floor of a building on Nott street, and that the room was kept by a Chinaman named Lee.
